THE WAR IN LOUISIANA.

Arrival of our Wounded at New Orleans.

(Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.)

CAIRO, April 23, 1864.

By arrival of the steamers Sultana, Gladiator and Henry Ames, we have New Orleans dates of the 16th, 16th, and 16th.

These of the 15th contain detailed accounts of the fighting on the 8th and 9th in Louisiana, not materially differing from those already published in Northern papers. They confidently assert that the result was a victory for the Union, but won at great loss of life.

Four steamers loaded with our wounded had arrived at New Orleans. The following partial list of the killed and wounded is published in the papers of the 15th:

Gen. T. E. G. Ransom, shot in knee.
Col. Hoge, 20th Iowa, shot in the head and instantly killed while carrying the colors from the General to the 19th Kentucky regiment.
Capt. Hall, 20th Iowa, killed.

This news is too good to be true. Halleck is one of the next described by Johnson, who seldom die and never resigns. But if it should happen to be a fact that he has resigned, it will be the most popular act of his life. When he returns to California it is to be hoped that he will devote his and vast attention to his city property, lands and minerals, during the remainder of his natural life.

THE MALDEN MURDERER.

He Pleads Guilty of Murder in the First Degree.

[From the Boston Journal.]

The arraignment of Edward W. Green, late Postmaster of Malden, for the murder of Frank E. Converse, Deputy Collector of the Malden district, in December last, took place Tuesday previous in the court room at Lowell, before Judge E. R. Hoar, of the Supreme Judicial Court.

The atrocity of the crime, the mystery which long surrounded the circumstances of the killing of the unfortunate gentleman, and the finding of the stolen money on his confession, have excited a public interest almost unparalleled in the history of the past few years, giving the latest aspects of Canada and Mexican questions.

As has been repeatedly stated in the newspapers, Green has been in the custody of Mr. Charles J. Adams in the jail at Lowell, since the time of his arrest. Since the early part of his incarceration Green has exhibited no striking appearance of remorse over his terrible crime.

In charge of Mr. Adams, the prisoner was taken to Lowell on Tuesday morning, and at 9 o'clock first objected to being handcuffed, but submitted when told it was necessary. Accompanied by counsel to avoid notice, he carried a book in his hand to note him, and but few in the car were aware of his presence. He was conducted to the court room by the back entrance, and at the precise moment of opening business the prisoner, with his counsel, Messrs. Sweetser and Lowell and J. Q. A. Griffin of Charlestown, entered. There was a buzz of commotion as he entered the dock, and a general rising of the people to view the murderer. Green's eyes were cast down, and he maintained a position of apparent indifference to the gaze of the crowd.

At the minutes before eleven o'clock, Attorney General Foster moved that the prisoner be arraigned.

The Court assigned Messrs. Sweetser and Griffin as his counsel, and inquired of them if they desired that the indictment should be read to him.

Mr. Sweetser stated that in anticipation of that request a consultation had been had with the prisoner.

The indictment was then read. Green with perfect self-possession heard it read, and when the reading finally at the clerk, without a moment's hesitation, replied, "Guilty."

To the question, "Are you guilty or not guilty of murder in the first degree?" the question was repeated, and the clerk put the reply, he replied, "Guilty." The question was then put, "Are you guilty of murder in the first degree?" Green answered in a low tone, "Yes, sir."

Mr. Foster then addressed the Court, and explained the character of the indictment, one charging the prisoner with murder in the first degree, and the other with murder in the second degree. The Attorney General declined to accept the plea, and the Court, in the usual manner, explained to the prisoner that the Government, by accepting the plea, he must plead either to both indictments or to neither. The prisoner then replied that he pleaded "Guilty" to both indictments.

The Court then asked if the plea was voluntarily made, and if he understood the consequences. Green answered in the affirmative. The Court then asked counsel if they had any suggestions to make, and counsel replied in the negative.

The Clerk then said to the prisoner, "Edward W. Green, what do you say to the indictment now—are you guilty or not guilty?"

Prisoner—"Guilty."

Clerk—"In the first degree?"

Prisoner—"Yes, sir."

The Court—"Your plea will be taken—guilty of murder in the first degree."

Green delivered his confession in a clear voice, which was distinctly audible to all in the room. Attorney General Foster then stated the facts in the case, which he should submit as equivalent to testimony. But the merchants were not for the banker, and they quietly laid the matter aside, and then at overthrew the Republic and their de-
